The Bond Buyer

Susan Dushock, a 40-year veteran of the public finance market who was a charter member and former chair of the National Federation of Municipal Analysts, died Dec. 13 following a long illness. She was 65.

Those who knew her described her as driven and compassionate, crediting her with helping to launch the careers of countless muni professionals.

John Mousseau, president, CEO and director of fixed income at Cumberland Advisors, paid tribute to Dushock as both a teacher and a straight shooter.

“You taught many people how to research a bond, gave help to those who needed it, called them as you saw them and never had a cross word for anyone,” Mousseau wrote.

Dushock’s funeral services took place Monday.
